Markets Will Open Nov. 17

The markets in the dark fired tobacco belt will open this year on November 17. Dates for opening of all tobacco markets were set at a recent meeting of the Tobacco Association of the United States held at Hot Springs, Va.

The Georgia belt markets will open on August 4; South Carolina belt on August 15, East Carolina belt on September 1, and the middle belt no September 22.

An increase in tobacco exports during the rest of 1936 was predicted and faith foreseen in the ability of American leaf to hold its own on the world tobacco market.

While tobacco acreages have been increased, a corresponding increase in production is not expected, due to the dry growing season. In fact an decrease in production totals is anticipated in most sections.

Appomattox tobacca is looking well for this season of the year.

Use for Durum Wheat

While durum wheat is unsatisfactory for the manufacture of bread, it is particularly suitable for the production of macaroni, spaghetti and other similar food products which are collectively known as alimentary pastes. The best quality pastes are made from semolina, a coarse granular product obtained from durum wheat by a special milling process which differs from that employed in the production of flour from bread wheat. Macaroni and similar products, says the Montreal Herald, are prepared from semolina by mixing and kneading it with water and salt to produce a stiff unleavened dough which is forced through suitable dies to produce the shapes desired, the surplus water added being removed by a drying or curing treatment.

Control of Erosion Important to Farmer

Controlling erosion, the thief of fertile topsoil, is a prominent feature of the new soil-improvement program. The soil-building and conserving crops advocated under the new programs serve to check erosion in several ways.

While these crops are growing, their roots form a thick mat which holds the soil particles in place. They also check the run-off of rain water by impeding its flow down hill and by increasing the capacity of the land to absorb water in large quantities.

Then after they have been plowed under, the buildup and conserving crops add organic matter to the soil that makes it soft and spongy. Rain soaks into such soil and is held for long periods.

Soil well filled with organic matter also has a greater tendency to remain in place than gritty sand or clay soils. When the soil absorbs large quantities of water it prevents floods during heavy rains and keeps the land from drying out so completely when rainfall is scarce.

On an 8 per cent slope a field on which nothing but corn is grown will lose 25 per cent of its rainfall by immediate run-off and an average of 67 tons of soil per acre through erosion each year.

But if the field is in a good soil-building crop, it will lose less than 5 per cent of its rainfall and only a few hundred pounds of soil per acre.

When corn, wheat, and clover are grown in rotation, the average run-off of rain water is less than half the amount from a field kept continually in corn, and the soil losses are only one-seventh as much.

Rev. C. H. Williams

Word received from the hospital this morning showed no improvement in the condition of the Rev. C. H. Williams, who has been critically ill for several weeks. Friends have been keenly concerned over the recovery of the minister who is dearly beloved on his circuit of Methodist churches in this county.

Cheaper Feed for More Profit

Home-Grown Grains Can Increase Farmer's Margin.

More than one farmer is making the most of the improved prices for dairy products by adopting economical feeding methods. Savings made through more economical feeding are only one of the many ways in which farmers who are members of dairy herd improvement associations are finding that they can increase their returns.

Substitution of home-grown grains or more expensive protein feeds together with replacement of part of the corn by oats are two ways by which dairymen are finding it possible to cut feed costs without lowering their herd production averages. One farmer increased his monthly profit some from 17 cows by $30.00 with a less expensive ration that contained part of the corn in the ration, thus reducing the cost of feed approximately 24 cents a hundred pounds. He herd also produced 34 more pounds of butterfat a month on the cheaper feed.

Another increased his net income $11.55 a month through the same kind of a ration change.

A third dairyman used a ration composed of corn, oats and distiller's grain instead of corn and a high protein supplement previously used and was able to cut feed costs by nine cents a hundred pounds, although the protein content was the same. The cheaper ration reduced the feed cost of butterfat by five cents a pound and the feed cost of milk by 14 cents a hundred pounds.
